India’s Relations with its Northeast Asian Neighbors

Thursday, December 4, 3:00 - 5:00 p.m.
Taj Palace, Sardar Patel Marg, Diplomatic Enclave
New Delhi - 110 021, India

Free and open to the public
RSVP is requested by December 1 at 5 p.m.
Please visit http://aparc.fsi.stanford.edu/events/registration/218369 for more information and to RSVP. Any questions may be directed to Ms. Huma Shaikh at hshaikh@stanford.edu.

This past May, India, a country of over 1.2 billion people, elected Narendra Modi, the leader of the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) as the new prime minister, shifting leadership away from an incumbent party that held power for the past few decades. This new government, set in the context of shifting political and security dynamics, brings new challenges for dialogue in a region that sees unresolved border disputes and historical tensions, particularly between China and India.

What impact will India’s new leadership have in Northeast Asia? How do historical relationships continue to shape the present? What is the outlook for policy priorities between India and countries in Northeast Asia?

Scholars from the Walter H. Shorenstein Asia-Pacific Research Center at Stanford University and the Brookings Institution’s India Center will offer perspectives in a panel discussion. This event is Shorenstein APARC’s inaugural event in New Delhi.

Panelists
Vikram S. Mehta, Moderator; Chairman, Brookings India Center
Michael Armacost, Shorenstein Distinguished Fellow, Shorenstein APARC
Karl Eikenberry, Shorenstein Distinguished Fellow, Shorenstein APARC
Gi-Wook Shin, Director, Shorenstein APARC
W.P.S Sidhu, Senior Fellow, Brookings India Center