Divergent Memories

Opinion Leaders and the Asia-Pacific War

by GI-WOOK SHIN and DANIEL SNEIDER

No nation is free from the charge that it has an incomplete view of the past. History is often contested and reshaped over time. Debate over the history of World War II in Asia remains intense, and Divergent Memories examines the opinions of powerful individuals to pinpoint the sources of conflict: from colonialism in Korea and atrocities in China to the American decision to use atomic weapons against Japan.

Rather than ignoring dissenting voices, Gi-Wook Shin and Daniel Sneider pursue a different approach: analyzing how historical memory has developed, been formulated, and even challenged in each country. By identifying key factors responsible for these differences, the book provides the tools for readers to both reflect on their own national histories and to be more understanding of others.

“...A wonderful contribution that shows how differently Asian wars were perceived by Chinese, Koreans, Japanese, and Americans. It breaks through stereotypes by revealing the nuanced views of opinion leaders in all four countries. By digging deeper, Shin and Sneider help pave the way for replacing hateful passions with compassionate understanding.”

—Ezra Vogel, Professor Emeritus,
Harvard University

“... [This book] offers a series of intriguing and important contrasts between China, Japan and Korea, as well as the US. A valuable new resource for scholars and general readers interested in the past and future of the Asia-Pacific.”

—Rana Mitter, Oxford University and author of Forgotten Ally: China's World War II, 1937-1945
